

Invitation to High Schools to participate in the “The Modern Argonauts” project

The research project “The Modern Argonauts: A Multicultural Educational Programme Preparing Young People for Contemporary Challenges through an Innovative Use of Classical Mythology” (ERC Proof of Concept Grant) is being implemented at the Faculty of “Artes Liberales” of the University of Warsaw under the guidance of Prof. Katarzyna Marciniak. Within this project, an international educational programme is developed, designed to prepare school youth for the challenges of the modern world through an innovative use of Greek and Roman mythology. The programme will be published as an Open-Access handbook in English. Experts from Europe, Africa, Asia, the Americas, Australia and New Zealand are involved in its preparation.

The handbook will have the form of a game: its users will take on the role of “Modern Argonauts” and embark on an expedition to discover a common mythical heritage. Students will learn about ancient sources, their reception in various contexts, and selected mythical motifs from other cultures. They will be also encouraged to engage in creative activities. The programme will be addressed in particular to high-school students, in order to inspire young people to seek knowledge on their own, draw their attention to local and global heritage, and to teach them the principles of communication and respect for different cultures.

The handbook will consist of approximately 50 lessons. One of the stages of its preparation will be the testing of each lesson at school by teachers who will then provide the project team with their and their students’ feedback on the lesson.

We cordially invite High Schools to test the materials being created for this programme!

The criteria:
